Diego Gambetta is Carlo Alberto Chair in social and political science at Collegio Carlo Alberto, Turin, Italy, a Fellow of the British Academy, Quondam Fellow of All Souls College (Oxford), and Emeritus Fellow of Nuffield College (Oxford). In his career, he has addressed a host of challenging empirical questions, including why the Italian South been struggling to develop, what has kept the Sicilian mafia in business for so long, how can criminals trust each other, what makes people go on a suicide mission, and why we find a disproportionate number of engineers among violent Islamists, among others. In his work, he has made extensive use of game theory, in particular signalling theory, and a wide variety of methods, from ethnography to lab experiments.
